HIS FIGHT IS THEIR FIGHT: HOW ONE FAMILY HAS LEARNED TO LIVE WITH T1D

By Paige Eisemann

This time of year often finds us rededicating ourselves to the people and things we hold dear. Some families in our community use this as a reminder of their continued resolve to promote awareness and support research for causes that are close to their hearts. Those causes might be any number of things such as serving in church, school, service organizations, or various outlets throughout the community. One such cause is the Diabetes Research Foundation (JRDF), and for one local family the support is deeply personal.

The Allen family has dedicated time and energy to bring awareness to the topic of type 1 diabetes (T1D) because it impacts their family daily. At 20 months old, Garrett Allen was rushed to Vanderbilt Children’s Hospital with extremely high blood sugars. Garrett’s mother Sally recalls, “He spent one night in the NICU and another night on the pediatric floor. We rang in 2010 giving shots to oranges in order to learn how to care for him once we were discharged.” This diagnosis brought into sharp focus the need for advocacy and research. “We had to learn at a young age how to be a major organ for our child. We literally make life and death decisions on a daily basis. Now at 14 he makes those decisions. It is a constant tight rope. He manages his disease with some of the best technology on the market. He wears a CGM (Continuous Glucose Monitor) which reads his blood sugar all day long. It communicates with his insulin pump and our phones. I can track his levels on my iWatch & iPhone! It’s amazing.” Garrett now wears a closed loop insulin pump. Sally explains that the pump medicates Garrett when he is high (based on the levels set by Garrett, his family and doctors) and shuts off if his blood sugar goes below 70. "This alone can be life saving. It talks to his CGM to know what his levels are. He still has to personally bolus (or medicate) via the pump for every bite or drink that goes into his body. It doesn't do it all." She cautions that sometimes technology fails and he goes too high or has a severe low. "Lows are the scariest as he could die if not caught quickly. Overnight lows are terrifying. My phone alarms when he falls low at any time so we can give him a snack. It also alarms for highs. Highs are terrible, and cause long term damage to the kidneys, eyes, and have other effects, but aren't as much of an immediate scare. We still work quickly to get his number down. His pump & CGM as well as many other advancements in T1D research came from JDRF research."

Over 110 people are diagnosed every day, an equal number of adults and children from all walks of life. Type 1 diabetes is an autoimmune disease, meaning the immune system destroys the pancreatic cells that produce insulin. This means a process your body does naturally becomes something that now requires your daily attention and manual intervention. Sally shares that a few symptoms to note are frequent urination, dry skin, and excessive thirst. "Unfortunately most of the time you have to ask your doctor for a simple finger prick blood test if you are experiencing symptoms. It is not common practice to do this otherwise", she states.

JDRF was founded in 1970 and is the leading global organization for advocacy of funding for type 1 diabetes research to help those with T1D live longer and stay healthier while they await a cure. A strong advocacy collective of voices banding together not only advance the cause of funding research and fostering understanding, but create support systems that become lifelong friendships. Their website states that JDRF "works every day to change the reality of this disease for millions of people—and to prevent anyone else from ever knowing it—by funding research; advocating for government support of research and new therapies; ensuring new therapies come to market and are recommended by healthcare providers; and connecting, engaging, and educating those with T1D.”

Founded by parents determined to find a cure for their children with T1D, JDRF expanded through grassroots fundraising and advocacy efforts to become a powerhouse in the scientific community with dozens of U.S. locations and five international affiliates. They have funded about $2.5 billion in research to date and have made significant progress in understanding and fighting the disease.

The Tennessee chapter of JDRF is based in Brentwood. Hosting events, community forums, even providing one on one support, they maintain a strong presence throughout the state. The Allens advocate through this chapter in many ways. Sally shared that in 2013 Garrett was chosen as one of the youngest members at the JDRF Children’s Congress in Washington, D.C. at only five years old. “He spent four days learning all about T1D research and then met with our Congressional Member (Marsha Blackburn at the time) and our Senators.

We talked with them about the importance of funding for research and educated them on the disease”, says Sally. In 2014 she was asked to be on the JDRF Middle TN Board of Directors and take on the role of Advocacy leader. Using her education and professional skills, each March for the past eight years she has joined a team of three individuals representing Tennessee who have traveled to DC (or attended virtually) to speak to all of the TN Congressional members and senators.

She states that during these congressional visits, “We share our stories and how this affects our daily lives. JDRF has been fortunate to receive a renewal for the Special Diabetes Program each year I’ve been a part of the organization. This program gives $150 million to T1D research annually. JDRF almost matches that amount in annual fundraising yearly as well.”

Currently serving in her final year as the JDRF Middle TN Board of Directors Advocacy Chair, Sally also acts as a mentor to newly diagnosed families in the Middle TN area. She cautions against common misconceptions that T1D is something you catch or that you did something to cause it. “It is NOT from eating too much sugar. When people say, oh we will get diabetes from eating that, or diabetes in a cup referring to a sugary item, it shows not many understand the disease.

Garrett Allen, 14

No one asks for this. No one caused this. A very tiny portion of Garrett's pancreas quit working, when he was an infant! We have no family history. No predisposition." It is this valuable personal understanding and connection which can make a difference to families who are struggling to understand T1D. Devoting time and energy to advocate for research and promote awareness is this family's way of giving to others, as well as advocating for their loved one.

The Allen family's story reflects that of many. Regionally, there are notable public figures who have committed to advocacy and research. Former Titans general manager Jon Robinson and wife Jaimie have dedicated their time fighting to provide awareness, as their daughter Taylor was diagnosed at 6 years old. Hockey star Luke Kunin of the Nashville Predators makes appearances to advocate and fundraise for research, as he also has T1D. Country singers Mark Collie, Eric Pasley and RaeLynn speak about their experiences managing the disease working in the music industry while using their platforms to champion research. As a labor of love, these families and many more commit to raising awareness, advocating for research, and hoping for a cure. Their resolve is a reminder of the power of committing time and energy to things that truly matter, for the good of us all. What better statement of love can there be, than the one of hope?

CHEERS TO MISS ASHLEY'S TEAROOM

By Tony Centonze

"We believe, better ingredients will make for better tea, that's why we're here." That's the motto of Miss Ashley's Tearoom & Cafe, located at 610 Washington Street in Clarksville since August of 2022, right around the corner from Wicked Good Sandwiches.

Anissa Gold opened Miss Ashley's less than one year ago, and has seen great success so far.

"It has been wonderful," Gold said. "We are actually outgrowing this location, already. Our focus is on tea, but we also have a full service menu with breakfast, lunch, and dinner."

Tearooms have been a growing trend for a while now, and according to Business Wire, "the total coffee and tea market is predicted to grow from $100.78 billion in 2021 to $165.88 billion in 2026." That growth is happening in cities, large and small.

And, sipping tea is not just for women over a certain age, millennials in the 24 – 35-year-old demographic are a major segment of the market, and Generation Z is now doing their part to drive the increased demand.

Various types of tea are popular for a myriad of reasons, some just for their flavor profile, others for their health benefits. Some say there are thousands of varieties of tea, which come from four major classifications; White, Black, Green and Oolong. Miss Ashley's serves about 300 varieties.

Front, Emmie Morris, Back L - R, Anissa Gold, Caiylea Gold, Torri Greer and Nira Washington

“Yes, we have over 300 loose leaf teas,” Gold said. “We offer some boxed teas that are grab and go, but the focus is the loose teas that we brew, which can be served hot or cold.”

Miss Ashley's isn't just about great tea. For breakfast, the cafe serves up pancakes and waffles, eggs, bacon, and sausage. There are also scones and croissants. At lunch, there are pastas, like fettuccine Alfredo, with chicken or shrimp, as well as homemade quiche and chicken salad. One of the cafe's signature items is their ham, turkey and cheese, which is offered on a croissant, or as a melt on Texas toast. That comes with home fries and/or a fruit cup.

Other popular items on the menu are the Cafe's unique selection of mock-tails, which are created using luxury gourmet tea, freshly brewed, and infused with juices, fresh fruits and berries.

The little shop seats about 54 people. During the day, they cater to a lot of ladies who enjoy the quiet atmosphere. In the evening they draw a younger crowd.

Our mock-tails are $6.50,” Gold said. “A glass of tea starts at just $5.25, our pots of tea are $12.99, and are unlimited when you order the tea time lunch special. Our customers absolutely love that they can get that with sandwiches, or scones. We have our macrons, which are different flavors each week.

"We offer savory or sweet scones, there are ham and cheese, blueberry, chocolate chip, and lemon. We also offer fresh fruits with orange marmalade and our crême Chantilly, a homemade cream that I make. Nobody has that recipe but me."

Morris added, "She also offers homemade, handcrafted quiche with ham and cheese, or spinach and bacon, and another big seller is Anissa's chicken salad."

Emmie Morris has been with Anissa since the beginning. "Usually, it's just Miss Gold and me and these other ladies help us out throughout the week. Of course, Saturdays are our busiest days. You better have a reservation."

To make a reservation, you can get in touch on Facebook at Miss Ashley's Tea Room or at their website, www.missashleystearoom.com.

"People love our teas, they are the star of the show, Morris said. "We have a great variety from black to green to Oolong to white teas, and everything in between. You're going to find Rooibos teas are going to have the most robust flavors. We do spotlight this time of year our health teas. We offer health and wellness, body busters, belly-be-calms, and your jet-lag kind of teas.

"Each month throughout the year we try to spotlight new options. We have so many flavors, and some can get lost in the shadows, so we like to feature different types and flavors on a monthly basis. That gives our customers a chance to try them, and see which will be their favorites. We really have flavors to meet everyone's taste buds, from fruity to savory, to chocolate-y. So, our offerings are changing constantly."

"ANISSA GOLD OPENED MISS ASHLEY'S LESS THAN ONE YEAR AGO, AND HAS SEEN GREAT SUCCESS SO FAR."

Morris spends most of her time out front, serving and mixing drinks. Gold spends most of her time baking and cooking, an activity she has loved since she was a child.

"Another customer-fave is our Shepherd's Pie," Gold said. "That's another family recipe, and you won't taste anything like it anywhere. We get a mix of people - college kids who want to sit and have tea while they study, and older customers who are more interested in the 'tea time' experience."

Miss Ashley's offers 'tea time' all day.

"It's a specific menu, all of which include a pot of tea," Gold said. "They range from cream tea with scones or dessert, all the way to Miss Mary's that comes with Shepherds Pie, or even catfish.

"Our future plan is to relocate to a larger building, but that won't happen for a few years. I would love to have an entire bakery inside the restaurant. I do so many desserts, but I can't roll them out all at one time."

Gold and Morris are proud to announce that they have the largest selection of any tea room in Tennessee and Kentucky.

Gold said, "Some younger members of the team are getting the word out on social media, Everyone helps out when and where they are needed."

Morris said, "We do feel that this is a team effort. It's not just about the individual tasks. We really try to come together and help each other out, and we have a good time while we're doing it."

Gold talked about her true inspiration. She laughed, saying, "I'm just fancy", Then humbly said "I started baking at age 10. I was inspired by my mother, Miss Mary, and my grandmother, Miss Sadie. The first thing I made was lemon sweet rolls, with assistance from my grandmother. She passed on, last year, but when I bake and cook, I have my grandmother with me, and she always inspires perfection. What would she say about all this? She would say, 'this is really busy', but she would love it. We have a signature mock-tail, and tea, named in her honor." 🦋

PLAYTIME BEDSHEETS & MORE!

By Paige Eisemann

John Wesley famously said, “Do all the good you can, by all the means you can, in all the places you can, at all the times you can, to all the people you can, as long as ever you can.” One young girl from our community has chosen to devote her time and energy into doing good for others in a myriad of ways, and her most recent endeavor is benefitting other children at a time when they need support the most.

Sasha Albright is a busy mother. Aside from raising her family, she is an outspoken advocate for achondroplasia dwarfism on behalf of her incredible daughter Kai'Lani. Sasha has more than one amazing daughter, though. Evelyn, age 8, has learned that doing good for others is one of the most powerful things a person can do. Even at her young age, Evelyn has undertaken many service projects within our community. A passionate Girl Scout who is actively involved in troop 220, Evelyn has been a part of many service projects. Over the past few years she has collected pet food and cat litter for donation to the Montgomery County Humane Society, and collected all sorts of winter wear to donate to our homeless citizens via The Old Firehouse Day Shelter. Over the past few months, Evelyn set her sights on a new project.

Having a younger sister with achondroplasia dwarfism, Evelyn is used to spending time at doctor's appointments and Monroe Carell Jr. Children's Hospital at Vanderbilt.

Observing the children being treated at Vanderbilt inspired Evelyn. She wanted to do something for these children, something outside of the usual donations of coloring books and toys. When her mother shared an article about fun and interactive bedsheets being used at Children's Hospital at Erlanger in Chattanooga, Evelyn knew she had found her next service project.

Playtime Bed Sheets are the invention of a North Carolina father named Kevin Gatlin. While visiting a friend's child in the hospital, he saw what a struggle it could be to balance games on the hospital bed. He thought it would be easier if the activities were actually printed right onto the sheets. This would allow pediatric patients to learn, play and sleep without ever leaving their bed. (Which is especially important when patients need to be immobile.) Seeing that the hospital environment can be boring and monotonous for children, Kevin had the idea to produce bed sheets featuring games, lessons, and more. After two years developing his idea and working out details of production, his idea of interactive bedsheets came to life. Each set is available in bright colors, featuring more than 50 fun interactive games such as checkers, word finds, tic-tac-toe, as well as original games and activities. Parents can print out printable game pieces for the children's bedding at playtimeedventures.com. Each set of printable game pieces by Playtime Edventures is designed to be played with the Playtime bed sheets. To get the most from your printable game pieces, the company recommends getting them laminated. Dozens of children's hospitals around the country are now using the bedsheets, and once she found out about them Evelyn knew that she wanted to provide them for the patients at Vanderbilt Children's.

Evelyn jumped right in, making videos for her mother to share on her social media. She made countless videos explaining the project and asked friends and family to contribute. One of her videos is even featured on the Playtime Edventures Bedsheet YouTube channel! She set herself a goal of donating 100 sets of Playtime Bedsheets. She worked hard since summer 2022, doing extra little jobs and saving her money as well as fundraising from loved ones.

Over the holiday break, Evelyn and her family were able to deliver 21 sets of bedsheets to Champ's Toy Chest, where donations are made for children at Vanderbilt Children's. She specifically requested that they be used in the surgical wing. Knowing how boring it can be for a child awaiting surgery, or having to be immobile while in recovery, Evelyn knew this was right where her donation should go.

While Evelyn is thrilled to have been able to donate 21 sets of bedsheets, she is still working to achieve her goal of donating 100 sets. Each set of sheets is $25, and Evelyn continues to promote her project via videos posted to her mother's social media as well as the Playtime Edventures YouTube page. If you would like to contribute, you may visit her fundraiser at the address given at the conclusion of the article, or via the Playtime Edventures YouTube channel link below. Evelyn may only be eight years old, but she is an amazingly kindhearted child who wants to give back to other patients at the hospital that has taken such good care of her sister. Evelyn is setting an example for us all of doing all the good we can, for those who need it the most.

Seasonal Affective Disorder or the Winter Blues? How to Know the Difference and Ways to Minimize the Symptoms

Do you find yourself feeling sad and poorly motivated during the winter months? Do you look forward to getting home each day to change into your PJ's and head to bed early each night? Do you find yourself turning down social invitations because you have no energy or desire to be around others? Do the activities that typically bring you joy now feel too difficult or not worth the effort?

If you answered "yes" to most of these questions, it is possible you may be suffering from the winter blues or maybe something more serious: Seasonal Affective Disorder.

According to the National Institute of Mental Health, Seasonal Affective Disorder (SAD) is a type of depression that's related to changes in seasons — SAD begins and ends at about the same times every year.

Symptoms of major depression may include:

- Feeling depressed most of the day, nearly every day
- Losing interest in activities you once enjoyed
- Experiencing changes in appetite or weight
- Having problems with sleep

- Feeling sluggish or agitated
- Having low energy
- Feeling hopeless or worthless
- Having difficulty concentrating
- Having frequent thoughts of death or suicide

For winter-pattern SAD, additional specific symptoms may include:

- Oversleeping (hypersomnia)
- Overeating, particularly with a craving for carbohydrates
- Weight gain
- Social withdrawal (feeling like "hibernating")

To be diagnosed with SAD, a person must meet the following criteria:

- They must have symptoms of major depression or the more specific symptoms listed above.
- The depressive episodes must occur during specific seasons (i.e., only during the winter months or the summer months) for at least 2 consecutive years. However, not all people with SAD do experience symptoms every year.
- The episodes must be much more frequent than other depressive episodes that the person may have had at other times of the year during their lifetime.

If you are experiencing many of these symptoms, it is likely that you will want to seek professional help. But for those with less serious concerns, there are ways to improve your mood.

1) Move Your Body. It seems like the longer days of spring and summer lend themselves to more opportunities to stay active — especially after a day of work. But it may be even more important to move your body during the winter months. A few things to consider:

- Try to plan your workouts first thing in the morning or before you go home for the day to ensure that you won't be tempted by the comforts of the sofa and the warm temperatures in your home.
- This is a great time of the year to join a gym or fitness classes to help with accountability and encouragement from others.
- If your workplace is large enough, ask a co-worker to join you for a brisk walk around the halls during the lunch hour or immediately after the workday.
- Use apps on your phone, watch or fitness band to complete challenges with friends or family members for more motivation and friendly competition.
- YouTube offers hundreds of free workouts you can complete in the comforts of your home. Even ten minutes a day can make a big difference in how you feel.
- At the very least, try to walk or stand a few minutes each hour during the day.

2) Stay Social. One of the leading causes of depression is social isolation and we tend to withdraw when we feel depressed. This sets up a vicious cycle. Be intentional to schedule activities that provide opportunity for socialization with others...and honor your commitments. Here are a few ideas:

- a. Host a game night. No matter what age you are, card and/or board games can be a lot of fun! Invite folks to bring simple snacks and spend a few hours in friendly competition.
- b. Attend sporting events. We are blessed in Clarksville to have some great high school sports teams, as well as Austin Peay State University. Just a few minutes to Nashville provides access to professional hockey, soccer, and even more college events. Use the Gametime App to look for tickets and some great last-minute deals.
- c. Participate in church activities, volunteer opportunities or civic organizations.
- d. Create or join a book club.
- e. Follow "Local Clarksville" on social media for local places to eat, shop and play.

3) Let the sunshine in.

- a. Whenever possible, position yourself close to a window or out in the sunlight (if weather permits). Vitamin D is essential to mental health.
- b. You might consider purchasing a light therapy box, which emits high concentrations of artificial light to mimic the sun. These are very helpful if you must spend a lot of time in closed spaces with no natural light.

4) Avoid screen time.

- a. Research published in the American Journal of Psychiatry (Choi, Stein, Nishimi, Gei, Coleman, Chen, Ratanatharathorn, Dunn, Breen, Koenen & Smoller, 2020) indicates that bingeing television is directly linked to depression. While it may be tempting to put on your PJ's and head to the couch for a Netflix binge each day, the result may be the opposite of what you hope to accomplish when it comes to making yourself feel better.
- b. Furthermore, the overuse of social media has been associated with depression, anxiety, feelings of isolation, low self-esteem and even sleep deprivation. (Exploring the Link Between Social Media and Depression: Deveney, Renee. 2022). If you're feeling particularly blue, consider how you are spending your "free" time each day.

5) Limit caffeine, alcohol, and sugar. Let's be honest, we all have comfort foods that come to mind when we want to feel better. During winter months, fruits and vegetables are not as appealing or as readily available as they may be during the summer months. As a result, we tend to choose heavier, less healthy options to warm our tummies.

- a. Consider healthy soups, crock pot meals or sheet pan dinners rather than fast food or take out.
- b. We are less likely to drink enough water when the temps grow colder and instead reach for coffee or cocoa. Consider hot teas in the evening rather than caffeine filled coffee that may keep you from restful sleep.
- c. Mocktails and no alcohol wines and beers are super popular. Experiment with new recipes to re-create your favorites without the ill effects of the alcohol.

Hopefully these ideas will help you to think about your own situation and how you can be proactive in minimizing the winter blues. If your symptoms become debilitating or if you are concerned you may be experiencing depression, reach out for professional help.

And lastly, if you or someone you know is having thoughts of self-harm, contact the suicide hotline by dialing 988. The 988 Suicide and Crisis Lifeline is a national network of local crisis centers that provides free and confidential emotional support to people in suicidal crisis or emotional distress 24 hours a day, 7 days a week in the US. 🦋

THE BUYING POWER OF WOMEN:

How Women Shape the Economy and Business World

By Kimberly Blaker

Women today control about one-third of household financial assets, constituting more than $10 trillion, points out Ted Jenkin, CEO/founder of oXYGen Financial in his May 3, 2022, CNBC article, "Women are gaining power when it comes to money – here's why that's a big deal." Moreover, he says the female economy will reach $30 trillion by 2030. These statistics reveal the crucial role women play in keeping the economy afloat—in good times and in bad.

As a result, many businesses have taken heed. Still, plenty of industries and companies remain behind the times when it comes to treating women as major consumers. They fail to see the power this segment possesses. For example, most women can attest to occasions when their gender has negatively affected the service and attention they received. Additionally, women are still taken advantage of because of their lack of or perceived lack of knowledge in certain industries. Women, however, have become increasingly educated consumers, and businesses that don't recognize this are learning the hard way. Many women, offended by these biases, walk away from a purchase and go elsewhere, demanding to be treated with respect. Advertising and marketing specialists are also catching on. Advertising that stereotypes women and marketing explicitly geared to male audiences don't sit well in the minds of women today. Stereotyping and the absence of recognizing women as potential consumers for traditionally male products are off-target, offensive, and fail to give these large consumers the information they need.

House & Home

Women today account for well over half of the spending on household goods and personal items. That's because they take more interest in shopping for these items, especially non-essentials. Women control most of the expenditure not only on décor, linens, and kitchen gadgets, but furniture, cabinetry, carpeting, lighting, and more. Furthermore, women play a significant role in the purchase of real estate, the biggest investment most families make. According to the National Association of Realtors' 2020 Profile of Home Buyers and Sellers, "19% of first-time home buyers and 17% of repeat home buyers were single women," totaling 36%. Single men accounted for only 20% of homebuyers in 2020.

Married women also markedly influence real estate decisions. According to David Powers Homes of Houston, Texas, couples ultimately agree on the purchase together. Yet research conducted by the company found women make almost 80 percent of the home-buying decisions in the company's $180,000 to $500,000 price range.

When buying a home, men and women each look for certain features. Women are most concerned with floor plans and designs and how these factors will accommodate their lifestyles. Specific features of importance to women include large closets, kitchen space and design, space needs, and overall comfort. Men focus mainly on technology, energy efficiency, and garage functionality. Probably one of the most under-recognized areas of women's buying power, however, is in the tool and home improvement industry. With the surge in do-it-yourself remodeling, women have fast become one of the big spenders in tool departments and home improvement aisles. Kimberly Stevens, a staff reporter for The Wall Street Journal, explains, "We're talking buzz saws, routers and power sanders."

The growth of female tool shoppers isn't minimal, Stevens points out. A survey by the Home Improvement Research Institute, found women have been outpacing men in their involvement in do-it-yourself projects since at least 2000. According to a female industrial designer at Porter-Cable of Jackson, Tennessee, as reported by Daily Gist, "Women are using these tools on a regular basis." The growth of female tool sales is the significant increase in women working in the construction field, which has nearly doubled over the last 15 years.

Travel

Women are equally important to the travel market. They now make seventy percent of all travel decisions. They're the larger clientele of adventure travel. But business travel has also seen marked growth by females. Women make up nearly half of all business travel, according to research by Judi Brownell, Ph.D., professor of Cornell University's Management & Organizational Behaviour Program. Over 75% of women traveling on business are college-educated and abler than men to articulate their needs. They participate in more leisure activities while traveling on business. They're also much more likely to order room service while traveling alone. For these reasons, they have a significant impact on this industry.

Investment

While the percentage of women who own stocks still lags behind men, ample research has found women make better investors. In 2017, Fidelity Investments reported after analyzing more than 8 million clients that when it comes to the return on investments, women outperform men.

Health Care

Women's voices are gaining prominence in the healthcare industry, as well. Women make at least two-thirds of the healthcare decisions in U.S. households, according to Amy Ertel Bellcourt, vice president of corporate communications for MVP Health Plan. So healthcare systems are paying particular attention by improving maternity wards and focusing a portion of their marketing on services affecting women.

“With the surge in do-it-yourself remodeling, women have fast become one of the big spenders in tool departments and home improvement aisles.”

Automotive

Another area where women play a crucial role is in the automotive industry. "Women," according to a report by the National Institute of Automotive Service Excellence, "are not only becoming more influential in deciding what car to buy, they are also taking over the traditionally male-dominated responsibility of maintenance and repair." Women make up between 65 and 80 percent of auto repair and service shop customers. Women are also responsible for almost half of new car sales and slightly over half of the used-car sales, according to Art Spinella, of CNW Research. Women influence 80% of all transactions. Not to mention, says Ford Motor Marketing, 95% of women have the power to "veto" an automobile purchase. What women want from this industry, experts say, is not to be treated differently. They want to be treated with respect. "Women ask more questions, inquire about details, and are more willing to look under the hood, or check out parts," says Diane Hohman, an automotive aftermarket consultant in Herndon, Virginia. So they're beginning to get the respect they deserve in this market.

Sports and Entertainment

Women are not only spending increasing amounts on clothing but on entertainment and electronics.

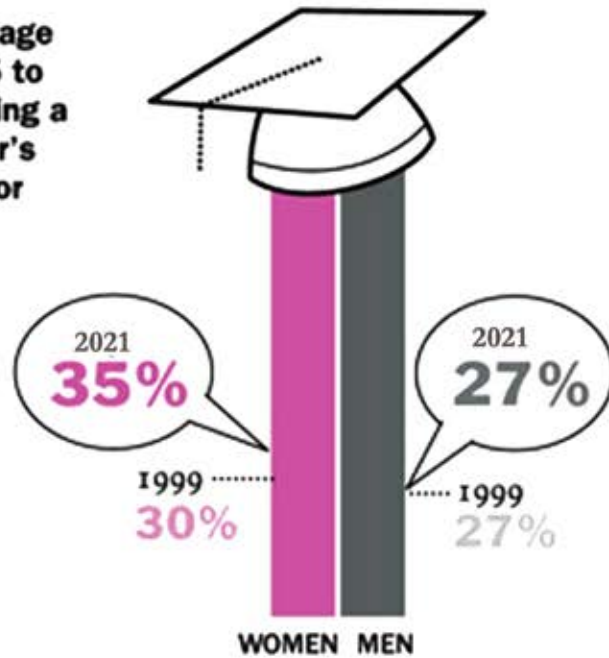

Furthermore, the women's sports apparel market is valued at $26.8 billion, nearly a third of the total sports apparel market of $80.1 billion as of 2018, according to the Euromonitor International. In fact, an unexpected 45% of NFL fans are now women according to the NFL's 2017 estimate.

What this all boils down to is two-fold. Being America's biggest consumers, women not only keep the economy from becoming stagnant during times of stability. They keep it from collapsing during a recession. This means women are gaining the upper hand in the way the business industry treats them. Women aren't demanding preferential treatment, but they do expect equal treatment and respect.

What is "It's a Scavenger Hunt!?"

This all age activity is a smartphone-guided event where you play along with your group in your own neighborhood on your own schedule by following instructions provided by the in-game host.

Fill your virtual scavenger sack with the items you help choose through riddle-like clues! Explore your surroundings, attempting to quickly locate a variety of items as they are revealed one at a time by your game master.

Get outdoors, get creative and try to get a top spot in the It's a Scavenger Hunt!™ Hall of Fame.

Teams are timed and each item found will be appraised and a combination of these two factors will be used to rank you against other teams.

How many people can play?

Price is per team, not per person. Groups can be any size, but teams of two, three or four work best as your group will need to follow along on a single mobile device.

What time does this start?

Because this game is self-guided by the in-app game master, you can play It's a Scavenger Hunt!™ in any city anywhere in the world and at any time on any day - no reservations required!

We recommend playing during business hours as it will make it easier to locate many of the items you must find.

Most groups complete the scavenger hunt in around 90 minutes.

Some places that we advertise with require us to provide a specific location plus an event date and a start and end time.

However, there are no restrictions on these tickets so you can still play at any time on any day, in any location.

Where do we play?

It's a Scavenger Hunt! is designed to be played in a busy populated area, such as a shopping mall or downtown shopping district.

However, anywhere with a variety of publicly accessible businesses and outdoor spaces is a potential location to play.

If the weather is inclement, an indoor shopping mall is the ideal rainy day location to play.

What's the refund policy?

All sales are final. Tickets are good for one year from date of purchase.

What do I do with my ticket?

Your ticket number should be entered when you register on our web site www.itsascavengerhunt.com.

All registration is done online and you will not have to check in with anyone before you start as the game is self-guided.

You do not need a physical ticket, only a modern mobile device with a data connection.

Inspired by Motown and R&B legends of the 1960s and '70s, DREAMGIRLS follows the rising stardom of the Dreamettes, an all-girl singing trio from Chicago. The three best friends — the phenomenally talented, but demanding Effie White, the beautiful and appealing Deena Jones, and the eager, romantic Lorrell Robinson — team up with driven, demanding manager Curtis Taylor, who is determined to see their — and his — star rise. As their careers begin to take off, changes are made to ensure their mass appeal to the pop market. Egos are bruised, tempers flare, and hearts are broken in pursuit of stardom. Inspired by the stories of groups such as The Supremes and The Shirelles and featuring many iconic classic songs, this hit musical is a love letter to American R&B music and the artists that make such music great.

TOVE LO - 7:30PM

As anyone with ears will tell you, Sweden is quite good when it comes to fostering amazing pop talent. With Stockholm's Tove Lo, however, the typical mould of elegant heartfelt electropop has been beautifully corrupted by the sort of lyrical honesty and rawness that not only ruffles feathers, but makes you want to clutch your hand to your chest and wail along at the top of your lungs. Having self-released two examples of her unique take on pop – the clattering blood-letting of Love Ballad and the raw, but disarmingly melodic Habits (the latter earning respect from everyone from Pitchfork to Popjustice) – Tove Lo is ready to take her pop confessionals to a whole new level.
